CLASS COMMITTEE.

CHARLES EDWIN STRATTON, Class Secretary.
JOHN DAVIS WILLIAMS.
JOHN MARSHALL WHITTEMORE, Jr.

The Secretary's address is 68 Devonshire Street, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON:
PRINTED BY JAMES F. COTTER & CO.,
No. 14 State Street.

Classmates:

Here is your own story of your last five years. I think you will all agree that if they have been as dry and meagre as the account you have given me, they must have been dull enough. However, reticence is often a virtue, and a man who will not "give himself away" once in five years to his Class Secretary should inspire confidence in any occupation or in any walk of life.

Short as your answers were to my circular, I was pleased with their number; only six out of the one hundred failed to reply.

We have lost but two of our number during the last five years; and you will find memoirs of them both under their respective names. The notice of Brewer was kindly furnished by a friend of his family; the short notice of Bright was written by the Secretary, when, at the last moment, he found that the one promised him was not forthcoming.

I trust you will kindly notify me of all errors or omissions in this or former Reports and also of all changes of address.

I am sorry you cannot all come to the Class Supper, where something more entertaining will be furnished than this compilation of statistics. But you will not forget that with it there goes to each of you the kindly wishes of his classmates, including

Yours very truly,

CHARLES E. STRATTON,
Class Secretary.

Soon after his graduation, he entered his father's counting-room in Boston, where he remained till November, 1867, when he went by ship, via Cape Horn, to Honolulu, where he soon became a partner in the house of C. THE FOLLOWING VERSES BY EMERSON WERE SUNG TO THE AIR OF THE CLASS SONG AT THE DECENNIAL DINNER, JUNE 27, 1876.

I.

The years may chase one another
  In joy, or linger in pain;
Yet still at the call of the Mother
  The broken line forms again.
She gave the loftier learning,
  And hers are the arms we wield:
She asks of each child returning
  "Is my TRUTH still on thy Shield?"

II.

The sight of each loved old portal
  Be to each returning son
A draught of youth Immortal
  From a fount of Faery won.
Forget the years' till to-morrow,
  Put the gathering cares to flight,
And banish each thought of sorrow,
  We're boys again to-night.

THE FOLLOWING VERSES WERE READ BY BUSWELL AT THE DECENNIAL DINNER.

Though forms once slim have need of stays,
And eyes are dim that used to brighten,
And heads that wore Hyperion's curls,
Grow bare before they've time to whiten,—

Yet somewhere, still, in every heart
The sacred spark is safely burning,
And flames to heat and life once more
To meet the season's sure returning.

That calls us home from devious ways—
Weary with all their noise and bustle,
To stand around our Mother's knees,
Beneath her elm-trees' vernal rustle.

The Parson lays his sermons down,
For physic children cry unheeded,
The teacher drops his weary switch,
And farmers' onions grow unweeded:

The lawyer locks his office door,
For a brief day his briefs forgotten,
And merchants leave upon the seas
Their argosies of coal and cotton.

The light of youth reflected back
  Wakes unused lips to song and story,
Like Memnon's statue, when the sun
  Had touched its dusky brow with glory.

That fount the Spaniard sought in vain,
  'Mid southern groves and streamlets laughing,
In Harvard's shadows bubbles up
  Afresh for every season's quaffing.

We drink and lay our burdens down,
  And rest beside the waters shining;
And, boys again, we wear once more
  The myrtle wreath of friendship's twining,—

And pledge again the sacred name,
  Through all our years forgotten never,
Our Mother!—dearest word of all,—
  Fair Harvard! fairer still, forever!
